Introduction

After considerable discussion at various times and places, a meeting was arranged January 22, 1931, at the home of William Anthony Heyman, seven miles south-west of Fremont, Ohio, for the purpose of definitely deciding either to publish biographical sketches of the Heymann families or abandon the idea.

The following were present: Philip A. Ziss, Alvin Ziss, Daniel Heyman, Sr., Daniel Heyman, Jr., William Anthony and Lucy Heyman, Oliver William Heyman, Samuel Heyman, Calvin A. Heyman, Lydia Heyman Hoch and Ethel F. Heyman.

Daniel Heyman, Jr., offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Whereas, there has been considerable discussion in regard to the publication of biographical sketches of the Heymanns, and

Whereas, there has been considerable time and energy spent in the collecting of data and the searching of records, and

Whereas, the consensus of opinion seems to be that the work be brought to a successful conclusion.

Therefore, be it resolved, that the descendants of John William Heymann organize now and here for the purpose of accomplishing this work.

The motion was unanimously adopted and the following officers elected:

Daniel Heyman, Jr., president; Ethel F. Heyman, secretary; Oliver W. Heyman, treasurer; and an advisory committee of Philip A. Ziss, William A. Heyman, Daniel Heyman, Sr., Calvin A. Heyman, Alma M. Herner, George W. Scheid and Rose L. Heyman.

Foreword

This book is the result of an attempt to place into the hands of the Heyman kin a brief history of the descendants of one John William Heymann, a citizen of Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany (born 1761; died 1836), the direct and immediate ancestor of three branches of the Heyman family of America. John William's own ancestry is also traced through extracts from several German parish records back to the year 1678. This work therefore covers a period in the life of the Heyman family extending over two hundred and fifty years.

It has been said that "mistakes and errors creep in where human investigation begin" and mistakes and errors undoubtedly will be found in these pages. The gathering of facts and data was quietly pursued for several years before an attempt was made here at home for biographies; and it seems to the committee that the response of the kin was marvelous.

The work of securing the biographical sketches of the descendants of John William Heyman began February 1, 1931, and by June 1, 1931, a sketch of nearly every kin had been obtained—432 in all. In the meantime, city libraries, county histories, court records and encyclopedias were searched; the State Library at Columbus, Ohio, was appealed to for books, and the best source of family history—the Old Family Bible—was constantly turned to. Likewise many cemeteries were visited numberless times and the records chiseled in stone made to speak for those who have gone ahead.

Much of the information was unsatisfactory and had to be verified through the sources named; some sources proved unreliable and had to be given up. In a few instances the kin showed a lack of interest or a marked indifference toward the work, but taken all in all, we feel the kin have done themselves credit by their response and support,—evidence that the old Heyman spirit of putting things across is still in the family.

It is also fitting that an expression of gratitude be recorded here for the invaluable assistance rendered to the committee by a cousin in the Fatherland, Herr Ludwig Schauss, in searching the parochial and state records and procuring extracts from them as well as other necessary facts that could not be obtained in this country.

That kindly consideration for its humble work be given and pardon for any errors made be graciously granted is the sincere hope of

THE COMMITTEE.

CHAPTER I

The Early German People

Long years ago, in the days of that warlike King of Macedon known to us as Alexander the Great, there lived in Marseilles, in Southern France a bold sea-captain named Pytheas.

Captain Pytheas had made many voyages, and visited many curious lands. He was, in his way, a sort of Greek Columbus; for he came home full of his travels and discoveries in the far north, where he claimed the sea came and went regularly twice a day in a great ebb and flow of tide. This great tide-moved sea, he said, washed other shores of a wonderful land; there, as one went still farther north, the days and nights were six months long, and men might see floating in the heavens a wonderful midnight sun.

But the people of Greece and Rome in Pytheas day could not understand this; they would not believe his story, but declared that he was out of his wits, and distrusted also all his other tales of discovery.

But the world found out after a while that Captain Pytheas was right; he had discovered Germany. The race of men he had found along this seaboard were the Teutons of German birth and the Cimbrii of Celtic origin. They came originally, it is believed, from far-off Asia, one tribe after another, the fiercest driving the others farther and farther before them, until their advance was cut off by the broad Atlantic or the cold North Sea.

It was on the table-lands of Asia that this wonderful people originally lived, in the valley north of the Aral Sea between the Oxus and Jaxartes Rivers. From their superior traits of character we recognize them as belonging to the Aryan race, that stock from which all modern civilization and progress have sprung.

The Aryans were neighbors of the Hebrews; and earlier, no doubt, worshipped the same God, believing in the immortality of the soul; but later, drifting away, they lost the inspiration of the true religion, and accepted the doctrine of the pagan gods, believing in Woden, Thor, and the lesser deities. They had a rude civilization; and their knowledge of the mechanical arts was exhibited in the constructing of comfortable houses, with doors and windows of opaque glass, and the manufacture of household utensils and weapons of war. The decimal system, which, in time, must take the place of much of our hard mathematics, doubtless took its rise with them when they discarded every means of reckoning except in ten and hundreds. They were primitive agriculturists; but, like their Hebrew brethren, they wandered from place to place tending their flocks; and while they followed the chase their women kept the home fires brightly burning. Their domestic life was beautiful, being founded on conjugal affection; for they honored their women, who returned their love and taught their children to be dutiful.

It is supposed that these people emigrated from this plateau (of the Iran) about the time Abraham left Ur of the Chaldees, and they reached northeastern Europe two thousand years before Christ; and there is a Hypothesis that in the dense forests some of them met other prehistoric races, and degenerated into the barbaric tribes which later overran Europe.

There were three waves of migration—the Celtic, the Germanic, and the Slavonic. The Celts went north, where Captain Pytheas found them; the Gauls, another branch of the Celts, settled in France, were Caesar subjugated them. When the Celts came they found only marshes and forests, with a race of people little superior to savages. The habits of the Celts were those of their Aryan ancestors; and like the latter, their character was worthy and reliable, almost their only blemish being the system of slavery, which originated in the conquered becoming the spoils of the conquerors. Woden, the highest God, ruled the fate of men, gave victory, sent every blessing, and took fallen heroes up into his spacious heaven. Frey dispensed friendship, faith, and freedom, and gave us Friday, the luckiest and unluckiest day.

After the sea-captain Pytheas found them, the ever increasing tribes had an uneventful existence, until the mountain glaciers, melting, caused great floods, and the encroachment of the incoming tribes sent them sliding on their shining shields over the Rhaetian Alps into Italy, where they sought new homes. The Roman general Marius conquered in the first struggle between modern civilization and ancient barbarism, in 10 B. C. at Vercellae. After he had slain one hundred and forty thousand Cimbrian, the women formed themselves into a square three miles in extent, with their shields locked together, and when driven to desperation, made a fortification of their carts and wagons. At last finding resistance useless, they slew their children and afterwards themselves, thus exterminating the race. But military experts declare that Marius could not have conquered the Cimbrians had he not posted his men in such a manner that the enemy was obliged to fight against a head wind and a July sun.

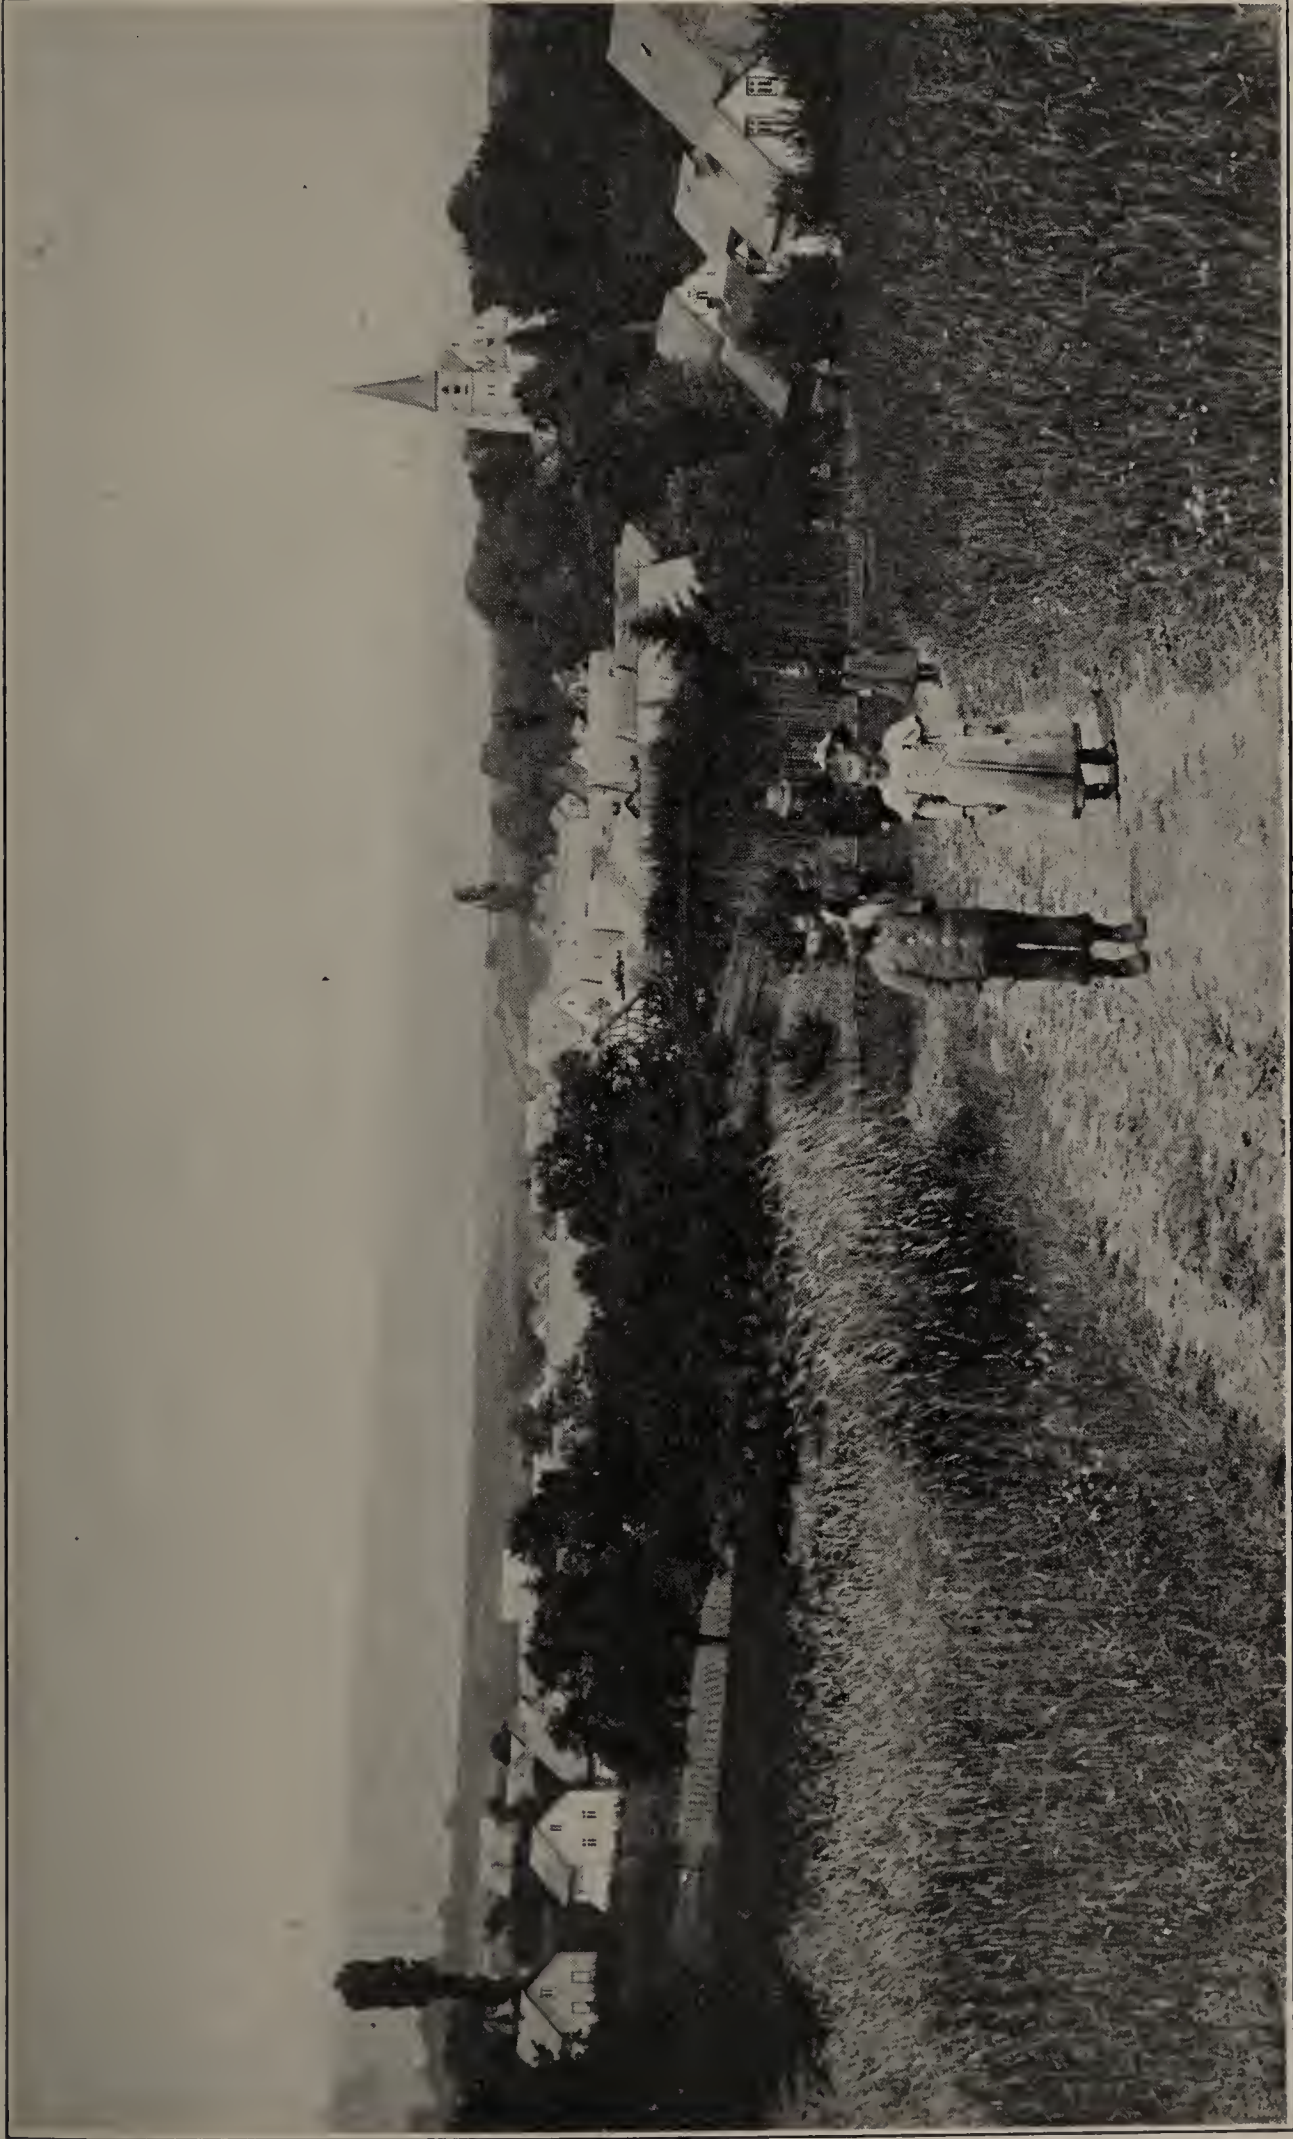

Within the next fifty years after the battle of Vercellae Caesar was born, and a quarter of a century later the great Augustus. It was known in Caesar's time that a multitude of people, who had homes of their own and were agriculturists, occupied the country beyond the Rhine. They were called Germani, either because so nearly related to the people of Gaul and therefore Germane to them, or from their weapons, for Ger—meant a spear. Ariovistus, who was conquered by Caesar near what is now Basle, Switzerland, was the first German name mentioned in history. In these wars Caesar recognized the German valor, and on one of his campaigns took back to Rome six thousand youths to fill up the waning Roman ranks. By this means the Germans learned Roman tactics, and carried home the refinement and culture of the more advanced civilization.

Tacitus describes very graphically the customs and habits of Germany the century before Christ. He speaks of the country as cold and barren, with malarious swamps in place of the present fruitful fields and finely built roads; of the dark forests sombre shade, where now are smiling prospects with happy people tilling the soil. The men spent their time in warlike pursuits and following the chase. They had reddish hair and blue eyes, and were simple, pious, truthful, patriotic, and brave, their word being as good as their bond; they were given to drink, and were therefore quarrelsome. The women, as now, were beautiful, virtuous, dignified, and proud, with blue eyes, golden hair, and fresh complexions. They shared their husband's counsel, gave advice, and attended to the agricultural pursuits when he was following the chase; but they accompanied him to battle, caring for the wounded, and stimulating to victory by shouts and song. The government in those days resembled a primitive republic, the first executive gathering being called a "Meeting," and afterwards, "Folkmote," because every freeman had a right to his word in matters to be considered. This "Folk-Mote" was the origin of the "town meeting" which still exists in America. The "Meeting" afterwards became the Assembly, and, in time, the Diet. The kings and chiefs were chosen in the general assembly which was in effect like our representative government. The kings and princes and chiefs formed a kind of a cabinet, where measures were discussed and afterwards presented to the people for final decision. If the freeman did not agree to these measures they clashed their arms.

The Romans first heard the name "Germans" from the Celtic Gauls, in whose language it meant simply neighbors. The first notice of a Germanic tribe was given to the world by the Greek navigator Pytheas who made a voyage to the Baltic in the year

330 B. C. Beyond the amber coast, eastward of the mouth of the Vistula, they found the Goths, of whom we hear nothing more until they appear, several centuries later, on the northern shore of the Black Sea. For more than two hundred years there is no further mention of the Germanic races; then, most unexpectedly, the Romans were called upon to make their personal acquaintance. The barbarians, as they were called, were men of large stature, of astounding bodily strength, with yellow hair, fair complexion and fierce blue eyes. As the Roman conquests began to extend northwards into the heart of Europe the races were soon brought into collision again, but upon German or Celtic soil. From the earliest reports, as well as later movements of the German tribes we are able to ascertain the probable order of their settlement, though not the exact boundaries of each. The territory which they occupied was almost the same as that which now belongs to the German States. The Rhine divided them from the Gauls, except toward its mouth where the Germanic tribes occupied part of Belgium, a line drawn from the Vistula southward to the Danube nearly represents their eastern boundary, while up to this time, they did not appear to have crossed the Danube on the south. The district between that river and the Alps, now Bavaria and Styria, was occupied by Celtic tribes. Northward they had made some advance into Sweden, and probably also into Norway. They thus occupied nearly all of Central Europe, north of the Alpine chain. The three principal vices of the Germans were indolence, drunkenness and the love of gaming. They honored the institution of marriage to an extent beyond that exhibited by any other people of the ancient world. Each family had its own strictly regulated laws, which were sufficient for the government of its freemembers, its retainers, and slaves, a number of these families formed a district. The gods which they worshipped were the powers of nature. Their mythology was the same originally which the Scandinavians preserved in a slightly different form until the tenth century of our era. The people had their religious festivals at stated seasons. Even after they became Christians in the eighth century, they retained their habit of celebrating some of their festivals, but changed them into the Christian anniversaries, Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide.

Thus, from all we can learn respecting them, we may say that the Germans, during the first century before Christ, fully prepared by their habits, laws, and their moral developments, for a higher civilization. They were still restless, after so many centuries of wandering; they were fierce and fond of war, as a natural consequence of their struggles with the neighboring races; but they had already acquired a love for the wild land where they dwelt, they had begun to cultivate the soil, they had purified and hallowed the family relation, which is the basis of all good governments, and finally, although slavery existed among them, they had established equal rights for free men.

If the object of Rome had been civilization, instead of conquest and plunder, the development of the Germans might have commenced earlier and produced very different results.

The towns and cities of Germany were, for the most part, handsome and well built, populace and wealthy, governed by their own laws and their own magistrates. They were fortified and garrisoned. The Germans were not manufacturers, but their toys, clocks and watches were exported to every part of the globe.

Note—A few paragraphs taken at random from the histories of Europe, which at this time was occupied by the German people will show the terrible hardships, sacrifices, sorrows, and tribulations in their attempt to form a great German people.

In the last half of the seventeenth century, although there was considerable progress in culture in the other parts of the world, in Germany learning, literature and the arts received little attention. No writer had distinguished himself for nearly half a century except Leibnitz and he was reckoned as the only intellectual man of the time. The lower classes were so oppressed by the nobility that they had made little advancement since the close of the Thirty Years' War.

The beginning of the eighteenth century opened for Europe with a lowery sky. Charles XII of Sweden and Peter the Great of Russia were fighting for the "Balance of Power." Leopold I declared war against France, still hoping to gain the succession for his son. England and Holland made an alliance with him, and also most of the German states. Thus it will be seen that the eighteenth century began and ended in strife and bloodshed.

The livestock in many districts was exterminated and grain could not be obtained in sufficient quantities to sow large tracts of land having deteriorated into pasturage; wherever the army had passed, the vineyards and orchards had been destroyed. In 1637 the year the Ferdinand died, want was so great that men devoured each other, hunting down human beings like deer or rabbits. Suicide was common in some of the island; and poor creatures were often found with their mouths full of grass, while others tried to sustain life by kneading bread from earth. The prosperity which existed at the beginning of the war in 1618 was never restored until 1848.

The first signs of revival in political life was the organizing of guards against the bandits into which the soldiers had developed during the war. Then people began to return to their desolate homes; immigrants came to settle and reclaim lost land, and the rabble in general brought the proceeds of their plunder, and gradually new communities were formed on the ruins of the old.

In the year 1650, for the first time the people, the most of whom had been born in these years of disaster, realized that the time of trouble and despair was a thing of the past. But it was long before the barbarism, which the influence of the army had engendered, gave place to systematic labor and civic life.

The cities had shared in the general demoralization; and when peace came, that independence which had been conspicuous in former years was found to have passed away.

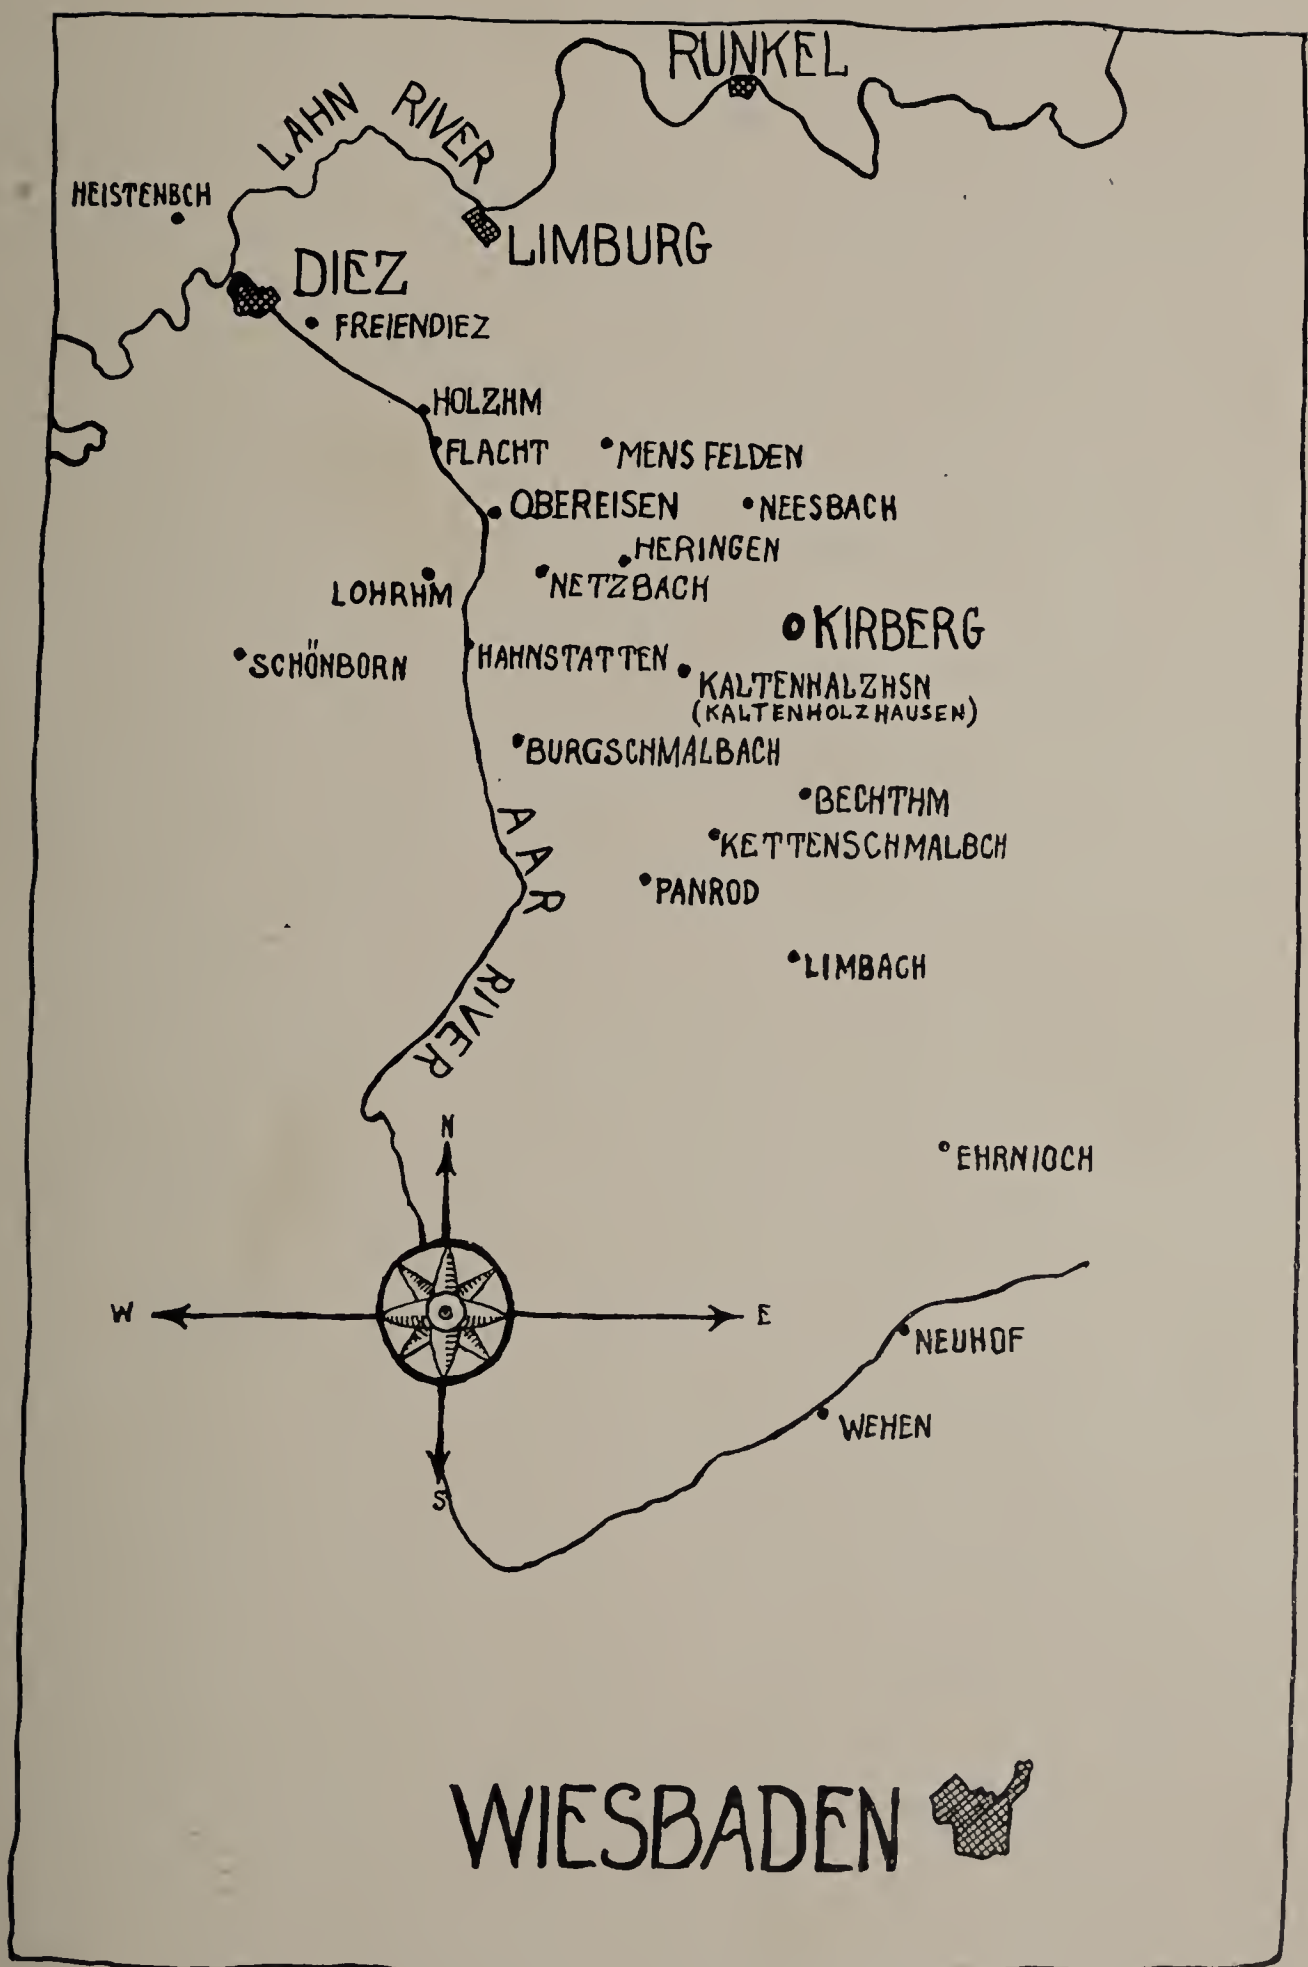

German traffic was also destroyed. The changed relation of things had set the tide of commerce in another direction, for now, since France and Sweden held the first place in Europe, and controlled it to a great degree, the coast trade was distributed more widely in that direction. Since their freedom, the Netherlands and England were on a commercial equality, and the Hanseatic League, so long the pride of the Northern Seas, sank into insignificance.

It was not the peasants alone who had felt the reverses of the war; knighthood, which had been gradually vanishing, now passed away.

The German Republic

Germany comprises 25 republican states: bounded on the north by the North Sea, Denmark and Baltic Sea; on the East by Lithuania and Poland, which, with the free city of Danzig separate East Prussia from the rest of Germany; on the south by Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and Switzerland; on the west by France, Luxemburg, Belgium, and Holland. The north forms part of the great European plain, and the south generally is hilly.

Agriculture is the chief occupation on the plains; large farms in the north and smaller in the south. At the outbreak of the World War nearly ten million people were employed in agriculture, but the percentage so engaged had fallen steadily since 1871, while the cultivated area and yield have increased. Rye, wheat, barley, oats and potatoes are the principal crops; hops in Bavaria, rape in Prussia, Flax and tobacco are also grown. The most important root crop is sugar beets in the district west of Madgeburg, a center for the manufacture of sugar, of which Germany, with over two million tons, was the largest producer. Scientific agriculture, based on artificial fertilizers, is intensively practised; agricultural schools have been established; cooperation encouraged, and land banks organized. Fruit, especially grapes, succeed best on the hill slopes of the middle Rhine. There are many large forests.

The most important mineral products are coal, iron and zinc. Coal is mined around Aachen, in the Rhenish and Westphalian basin (Ruhr valley), in the Saar basin and in Lower and Upper Silesia, lignite is abundant. The iron ore deposits in the hilly ground where Westphalia, Rhineland and Hesse-Nassau meet, in Silesia and in Saxony are most important. Zinc is obtained in Aachen. Other minerals are lead, tin, silver, bismuth, antimony, nickel, cobalt and copper. Rock salt is abundant especially at Strassfurt in Saxony, where it yields large quantities of potassium salts, largely used in agriculture.

In addition to industries directly dependent on agriculture and mining, Germany has large textile manufactures in the Ruhr basin, where woollens and silks predominate, in Silesia (woollens), in Saxony (cottons); shipbuilding and marine engineering are important at the seaports, especially Stettin. Other industries include clock making (Black Forest); porcelain (Meissen), making of pianos and scientific instruments; the chemical industries center in Saxony and Westphalia.

The population was estimated at 59,857,283 in 1919, when 11,803 emigrated; the war losses are estimated at 2,000,000 killed and 718,000 missing. As a result of the Treaty of Versailles the population was reduced by 8,000,000 and the area by 35,000 square miles; the area now is 174,000 square miles. (The State of Texas is 265,000 square miles in area and has a population of 4,663,228 in 1920.)

Education is compulsory and free from 6 to 14, and is almost uniform throughout the empire; it is of a very high standard. Elementary schools (Volksschulen) are maintained by local taxation with state aid. Secondary schools include evening continuation classes (Fortbildungsschulen), Burger and Hohere-Burgerschulen-(intermediate schools and various advanced schools preparing for university and learned professions). In Realschulen modern language take the first place; there are 21 state universities and numerous special schools and colleges, some degree-granting.

Before the World War Protestants formed 62 percent of the entire population, Catholics 36 per cent, Jews 1 per cent. Catholics are chiefly centered in Bavaria, 70 per cent; in Baden, 59 per cent; in Prussia, 36 per cent (predominating in Rhenish Prussia, Silesia, Westphalia and Hohenzollern); in Wurttemberg, 30 per cent; Hesse-Nassau, 31 per cent and in Oldenburg, 22 per cent. In Saxony and the remaining states Protestants constitute over 90 per cent. Liberty of conscious prevails.

The Duchy of Nassau

Nassau—a territory of Germany, now forming the bulk of government district of Weisbaden in the Prussian province of Hesse Nassau. Since 1866 an independent and sovereign duchy of Germany. It consists of a territory 1830 square miles in area, divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Lahn and bounded on the South and West by the Main and Rhine; on the north by Westphalia and on the east by Hesse. Southern half is almost entirely occupied by the Taunes Mountains while to the north of the Lahn is the barren Westerwald. The valleys and low lying districts, especially Rheingan, are very fertile, producing an abundance of grain, flax, hemp and fruit; but by far the most valuable product of the soil is its wine. Nassau is one of the most thickly wooded regions in Germany and its forests yield good timber and harbor large quantities of game while the rivers abound in fish. There are upwards of a hundred mineral springs in the district, the best known are those of Weisbaden and Ems. Other wealth of Nassau includes iron, lead, copper, building stone, coals, slate, a little silver and a bed of malachite. Manufactures are unimportant but brisk trade is carried on by rail and river in wine, timber, grain and fruit.

Weisbaden is the capital of the government district as it was of the Duchy.

The Duchy of Nassau is known in history as a “smiling province” and is noted for its well kept fields and forests; lying as it does on the east side of the Rhine it is in that part of Germany that has the most desirable climate in Europe.

During the Roman period the whole of the district of Nassau was occupied by the Maltiaci and later by the Alamanni. The latter were subdued by the Franks under Clovis at the end of the 5th century and the partition of Verdun in 843 the country became part of the East Frankish or German Kingdom. Christianity seems to have been introduced in the 4th century. The founder of the house of Nassau is usually regarded as a certain Drutwin (died 1076), who built a castle on a hill overlooking the Lahn, near the present town of Nassau. Drutwin’s descendant Walram (died 1198) took the title of count of Nassau and placed his lands under the immediate suzerainty of the German King; previously he had been a vassal of the archbishop of Trier. Then in 1255 Walram’s grandsons Walram and Otto, divided between them their paternal inheritance, which had been steadily increasing in size. Walram took the part of Nassau lying on the left bank of the Lahn and made Weisbaden his residence, Otto took the part of the right bank of the river and his capital was Siegan. The brothers thus founded the two branches of the house of Nassau.

The fortunes of the Ottonian, or younger line, belong mainly to the history of the Netherlands. William, the Silent, the best known of this line and his descendants were called princes of Orange-Nassau and this line became extinct when the English King, William III died in 1702. The descendants of Count John, his brother, remained ruler of Nassau until 1806, when he reigning prince, William VI was deprived of his lands because he refused to join the Confederation of the Rhine. Some of them were given in 1815 to the other main line of the family, the one descended from Count Walram. In 1815 William VI became king of the Netherlands as William I, and was compensated for this loss by the grant of parts of Luxemburg and the title of grand duke. When in 1890 William's male line died out, Luxemburg like Nassau, passed to the descendants of Count Walram. In the female line he is now represented by the queen of the Netherlands.

The territories possessed by the other branch of the house of Nassau were partitioned several times and only in 1816 was the whole of Nassau united under rule of Frederick William of Nassau-Weilburg as duke of Nassau.

In 1866 Duke Adolph espoused the cause of Austria, sent his troops into the field and asked the landtag for money. This was refused. Adolph was soon a fugitive before the Prussian troops, and on October 3, 1866, Nassau was formally incorporated with the kingdom of Prussia.

CHAPTER III

LINE of JOHN GEORGE HEYMANN

The Hunt's Corners Grandfather

John George Heymann, one of the pioneers of the Heymann family in the United States, was born on September 1, 1795, in Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He is the oldest child in a family of four children born to the Cooper Johann Wilhelm Heymann and his wife Catherine Dorothea (Holzer) Heymann. He died September 9, 1881, and is buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery.

He was educated in the school of his native village. This school system consisted of a period of eight years. It was compulsory for every normal German child to go to school. This was a very efficient school system introduced into Germany about the year 1805 by a Swiss educator named Johann Pestalozzi. This school system is very ably described in the historical sketch of his brother William Conrad Heymann. His children also received the benefit of this educational system in Germany.

According to the German custom that every boy must learn a trade, John George Heymann learned the trade of a baker and no doubt followed this occupation until his marriage.

On December 26, 1818, he was united in marriage with Maria Margareta Oppermann, born on April 14, 1796, in the village of Kaltenholzhausen. She is a daughter of John William Opperman and his wife Anna Margareta Opperman of Kaltenholzhausen. She died on March 29, 1872 and is buried beside her husband in the Hunt's Corners cemetery. It is said that their home life was ideal and harmonious.

To this union were born eight children:

Johannette Catherine, born July 25, 1819.

Anna Maria, born January 8, 1821.

Philip William, born June 22, 1822.

John George William, born January 9, 1826.

John Henry, born August 13, 1828.

John Philip, born July 9, 1833.

Catherine, born October 12, 1836.

William Frederick, born February 18, 1839.

JOHN GEORGE HEYMANN, The Hunt's Corners Grandfather
BORN September 1, 1795 DIED September 9, 1881

Soon after marriage the young couple moved into the old Oppermann homestead in the village which the wife inherited from the estate of her parents. Here they made their home and reared their family. He engaged in the farming occupation and was considered one of the prominent farmers of the village because he was able to own a horse with which to do his farm work, the smaller farmers having to content themselves with doing their farm work with cows. He was very industrious; in the out of season for farm work he spent his time hauling iron ore from a nearby mine to Hahnstetten, a delivery point. Bright and early every day possible with his horse and cart he hauled the ore. In this way he accumulated a considerable amount of money. It is said that when he emigrated to the United States he had $2500.00 in money; this was considered quite a fortune in those days.

In 1847 Philip William, the oldest son, emigrated to the United States. He paved the way for the remainder of the family. In the year 1848 John George Heymann with his wife and five of their children, as follows: John George William, John Henry, John Philip, Catherine and William Frederick, emigrated to America. They crossed the Atlantic in a sailboat, the voyage taking 42 days. They landed at New York and followed the regular course of travel of those days to the state of Ohio, coming via Albany to Buffalo by canal, thence over Lake Erie by boat to Sandusky, Ohio, arriving in that city June 22, 1848. From Sandusky they travelled overland to Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio. It is said the men folks of the company walked all the way from Sandusky to Hunt's Corners, in which vicinity they lived the remainder of their lives.

John George Heymann left Germany for two reasons: first, to escape military training for his sons; and second, to improve their financial condition. Conditions in Germany were growing bad because of the unrest of the people who were being severely oppressed. A paragraph from German history says:

"The people of Nassau had suffered frightfully from the oppression of the nobles and bureaucrats, and the smiling province of Nassau had become a scene of poverty and servitude."

On June 26, 1849 he purchased a farm of 196 acres of land from his son, Philip William. 102 acres, of this land, were in Lyme township and 94 acres in Sherman township. This land, which originally belonged to a man by the name of Elon Phay, he cultivated and had in his possession until 1886, when on December 30th, he sold 102 acres in Lyme township to his son John Philip. This tract is now owned by Louis P. Heyman. On the same date he sold the 96 acre tract in Sherman township to his son John George William. This farm is now owned by Albert Heyman.

He now retired from active farming and lived in a frame house on the west side of the church lot at Hunt's Corners. He followed no active occupation but spent a part of his time helping his sons with their farm work. Their home was a central place of gathering for the German people of the community, and a refuge and a place of cheer and comfort and sympathy and hospitality for a great many German boys who were forced to leave the Fatherland because of the oppression and the prospects of being drafted into the German military system. One room of their home was always reserved as a school room where German was taught to the young folks. Grandfather Heymann never learned much of the English language; he was partial to his native language.

They lived in this home until Grandmother Heymann became so feeble that she was no longer able to do her household duties. Somewhere about the years 1866 or 1867 they went to live with their youngest son William Frederick, south of the Hunt's Corners cemetery. Here Grandmother died March 29, 1872. In 1873 William Frederick moved to the Wood farm north of Hunt's Corners, where Grandfather died September 9, 1881.

On account of a considerable population of German people in the vicinity of Hunt's Corners they decided to organize a church congregation. On August 14, 1868, an organization was perfected, with 18 present at the meeting. John George William Heymann was president and Rev. C. Kuss secretary of this meeting. The following officers were elected:

William Conrad Heymann and Charles Mohr as Elders;

John George Heyman, Sr. and John George William Heymann as deacons.

They resolved to hold their first service in Sherman township on August 15, 1858. The congregation was to be known as the German Evangelical Reformed Church. Rev. C. Kuss was elected as the first minister.

Having no church house, services were held in different homes of the community. On September 11, 1858 a constitution was adopted, with 21 signatures. On March 28, 1863, papers of incorporation were drawn up. On January 6, 1866, a motion was carried to build a church. John George Heymann donated the lot upon which the church stands, this lot being one-half of his land possessions. His brother William Conrad of Weavers Corners donated the timber for this building. The following building committee was appointed: John Philip Heymann, John Henry Heymann and Rev. C. Kuss. The church was to be known as the German Evangelical Reformed St. Paul's church. On January 4, 1872 upon a motion the name "Zoar's" was added. Hereafter it was known as the German Evangelical Reformed Zoar's Church. There are no reasons given why so many changes were made in the name.

About the year 1866 the above congregation built the present church building at Hunt's Corners. John George Heymann was a prominent member of this congregation during the remainder of his lifetime. For many years services were conducted in the German language. As the younger generations grew to maturity the services were changed to English. This is a rural church and one of a few country churches where services are still being conducted. In connection with another charge (Fireside), the congregation supports a minister, and preaching services are held every two weeks. The membership for a number of years has been around fifty. The church has always had a very good standing among the Reformed churches. It is a monument to the Heymann family who have always been its chief supporters. Rev. Conrad Hassel is the minister at present.

John George Heyman was known and is remembered as a deeply religious man. He was one of God's noblemen. He was a man of prayer and devotion. He had daily family devotions in his home. His children were reared under these influences. He strictly observed the Sabbath day, and when not able to attend services on this day he usually read a sermon and had services in the home. He was an able singer and led in the congregational singing. All these religious influences are still considerably manifested in the Heymann family. He lived to a ripe old age of 86 years and 8 days. The influences of a good life go on.

John George Heymann was strictly temperate, using neither drink, tobacco nor profanity. He lived a consistent Christian life. He died according to the desire of his heart—alone with his God. His death occurred suddenly, while he was dressing and preparing for the noonday meal, on September 9, 1881. In habits of life, he was quick-tempered, stern and strict. His public activities were connected mostly with the church, of which he was a loyal supporter with time and means.

In social affairs John George Heymann was of a very quiet disposition; he was no "mixer" in a crowd. He was of a very studious and religious turn of mind. He loved to study and be quiet and peaceable. He was an extensive reader.

He was about five feet ten inches in height, erect, of medium build, alert, industrious and disciplinary, and by nature quiet, peaceable and studious.

JOHANNETTE CATHERINE HEYMAN ZISS

Johannette Catherine Heymann, oldest child of John George Heymann and his wife Maria Margaretha Opperman was born July 25, 1819, in Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany; and died of dropsy in Limbach, Germany, February 27, 1876.

She attended the state schools of Kaltenholzhausen, and as a young woman was married to John George Ziss of Limbach. Here a home was established, and here the following seven children were born to them:

Philip, born in 1845; died at the age of seven from the effects of a sun stroke.

Charlotte, born June 18, 1847

Johannette, born June 4, 1850

Wilhelmina, born September 17, 1852

Caroline, born October 1, 1856

Philip August, born August 30, 1858.

Johannette Catherine Heymann's children remember her for her marked kindness toward her family, and as a woman whose chief interest centered in her home and those who had been entrusted to her mother care. Although in ill health much of the time, she labored faithfully and self-sacrificingly for their best welfare.

She did not accompany her parents and the larger part of the family to America, but desired that her own son, her special pride, should early leave his homeland to follow his kinsfolk to the land of great opportunity across the ocean. Many conversations she held with him concerning the news from America, and courageously sewed in to his heart the seeds of ambition to make his way in the world over there, although she knew it meant the breaking of ties that were very dear to her. On business trips to Kaltenholzhausen, she was usually accompanied by Philip, and as they would pass through the thick, dark woods between that place and their home, a woods that depressed the spirit of youth with fear, and that seemed symbolical of the political and social atmosphere of the land, the boy unconsciously visioned the great, free, open continent far away, of which he finally became an honored citizen.

Mrs. Ziss was of average height and slender build.

PHILIP ZISS

Philip August Ziss, sixth child and only surviving son of Johannette Catherine Heymann and her husband, John George Ziss, was born in Limbach, Germany, August 30, 1858. He attended the state schools from the ages of six to fourteen, and after his confirmation, learned the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked one year and six weeks. Then came the long looked for opportunity to follow his kinsfolk to America. With his companion William Doerner he reached the shores of the new land in June, 1874. The fifteen year old boy made his way from New York to Cleveland, Ohio, where he accidentally met his mother's brother, Henry Heymann, who invited him home to Brownhelm, Ohio. After a week's stay he came to Hunt's Corners where he made his home for a while with his mother's youngest brother, William Heymann, working on the farm during the summer and in the fall going to Haskins, Ohio, where he lived with his mother's youngest sister, Catherine, (Mrs. Charles Mohr.)

At the age of eighteen the roving fever took possession of him. He wanted to see more of this big, new adopted land of his. He travelled westward, but upon reaching St. Louis the malarial conditions along the Mississippi made him seriously ill, and the rover returned to Ohio, recognizing that the Lord had other plans for his life, for which he has ever been very grateful. He now decided to settle down and become a builder in his adopted country. He purchased a small farm and a year later married Sophia Maria Gerkins, of Toledo, Ohio, on April 5, 1883, in the Reformed church.

Mrs. Ziss, born February 28, 1854, was the daughter of Eberhardt and Anna (Sckwke) Gerkins. She died May 29, 1931; buried in Memorial Park Cemetery near Sylvania, Ohio. A home was established on the little farm near Haskins, Wood County, Ohio. Here the following four children were born to them:

Walter Henry, March 15, 1884

Eberhart George, October 2, 1885

Gustave Oliver, January 27, 1887

Alvin Theodore, April 22, 1894.

With hard labor and good management, and later with the assistance of his sons, Mr. Ziss had accumulated at one time 375 acres of good farm land, and when he retired from active farming in 1927 to make his home in Haskins, Ohio, he purchased 130 acres more and divided his farm property among his sons. For twenty-five years he was successfully engaged in fattening cattle. He was always interested in the educational affairs of his community, serving a decade and a half on the township school board, and one term on the county board. He is a director and vice president of the Haskins Farmers Savings Bank.

For nearly sixty years Mr. Ziss has been a faithful member and a staunch supporter of the Reformed church, being one of the leaders of the Haskins congregation, and having held practically all offices within the gift of the church.

Mr. Ziss is known as a man of sound judgment, of firm convictions, and of friendly personality. Philip, the lone son of a sister who had been left behind when the Heymann family came to these shores, and the last of the family over there to emigrate to this country, has always been a favorite nephew and cousin in the Heymann clans, a true friend in need, and always a welcome, helpful, friendly kinsman.

In May, 1914, Mr. Ziss in company with John Schutzbegg, made an extended trip to his home in Germany, visiting his three sisters and families, and returned in July, 1914.

WALTER HENRY ZISS was born near Haskins in Middleton township, Wood County, Ohio, March 15, 1884, the oldest son of Philip August Ziss and his wife Sophia Maria (Gerkins) Ziss, and a grandson of Johannette Catherine (Heymann) Ziss and her husband John George Ziss.

He was educated in the township rural school, with two years of high school at Haskins, Ohio. After leaving school he remained at home helping his father with farm work until his marriage.

On June 26, 1919, he was married to Nettie Rosetta Bay, born February 23, 1891, in Toledo, Ohio. Her father is Fred Mitchell Bay and her mother is Ida Johanna (Duden) Bay. Mr. Bay was a shop carpenter in the Skinner Bending Works, Toledo, Ohio.

After marriage, Walter Ziss and his wife made their home on a farm of 130 acres in Middletown township near Haskins and resides there at present. He does general grain farming and dairying, and occasionally fattens live stock.

In physique he is five feet ten inches tall, of medium size, strong, quick, active, and in habits moderate.

He was baptized and in April 1898 was confirmed in the Haskins Reformed Church, where he is still a member, holding the office of deacon. He has also been a township trustee.

On June 5, 1917, he had to register for world war service. He was called to the colors but before his examination was complete the armistice was signed.

EBERT GEORGE ZISS was born in Middleton township, Wood county, Ohio, on October 2, 1885. He is the second son of Philip August Ziss and his wife Sophia Maria (Gerkins) Ziss, and a grandson of Johannette Catherine (Heymann) and her husband John George Ziss.

He received his education in the rural schools and two years of high school at Haskins, Ohio. He remained at home helping his father with farm work until his marriage.

On June 3, 1911 he was united in marriage with Hazel Grace McColley, born October 26, 1887, in Washington township, Wood county, Ohio. She is a daughter of Charles W. McColley and his wife Susanna (Walters) McColley. Charles McColley was a hardware merchant at Tontogany, Ohio.

He was educated in the township rural school, and one year of high school at Haskins, Ohio. After leaving school he remained at home assisting his father with farm work until his marriage.

On April 11, 1912, he was united in marriage with Cora Marie Weidner, born February 23, 1890, in Middleton township, Wood county, Ohio. Her father's name is Charles Weidner and her mother's, Philipine (Miller) Weidner of Perrysburg, Ohio. They were farmers.

PHILIP WILLIAM HEYMANN

The Columbus of the Heymann family, Philip William Heymann, oldest son and third child of John George and Maria Margaretha (Oppermann) Heymann, was born June 22, 1822 at Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He died February 2, 1902, and is buried in Beaver Creek cemetery, Wood county, Ohio.

He received his education in his native land, completing the eight year course. He was trained four years in the German military service. In the year 1847 he decided to emigrate to America. In company with another young man by the name of William Funk they crossed the Atlantic Ocean in a sail boat, the voyage occupying 52 days. He landed at New York with but two dollars in his pocket. On the vessel he loaned a friend $40.00 which was never returned to him. In New York he found a friend who loaned him $8.00 and with this small sum he was able to travel as far west as Sandusky, Ohio. From Sandusky he proceeded to Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio. In this neighborhood he bought a farm of 198 acres on credit, which he improved.

On November 9, 1849, at Sandusky, he was married to Mary Morehead of Hunt's Corners, born October 9, 1832. She was a daughter of George and Charity (Patton) Morehead. She died January 12, 1912, and is buried in Beaver Creek cemetery.

Five children were born to this union:

Anna Leona, born August 8, 1859

Flora May, born March 14, 1862.

In 1852 when he left the parental roof his father gave him a team of horses and $200.00 in money. With this equipment and his wife and two children he left Huron county and emigrated to Wood county which was nearly a wilderness. He bought a tract of 160 acres of land for $1000.00 about one mile north of Grand Rapids, Ohio. Their first home in this wild country was a log cabin which they built. It had neither doors nor windows. This tract of land was cleared of timber and made into a fertile farm. As Mr. Heyman prospered in this new country he bought other tracts of land and improved them, so that at the time of his death he owned a comfortable estate. He was also able to help his children get a start and homes of their own.

Philip William Heymann was one of the most intelligent and progressive citizens of the locality, and by his integrity, geniality, and good judgment won the friendship and esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He was a school director for a number of years and was always a ready and generous promoter of any worthy cause. In politics he was a Republican, but later became a Prohibitionist.

Mr. and Mrs. Heymann were converted and joined the United Brethren church in Christ in 1854. They were faithful members for 48 years, giving liberally of their time and means to the welfare and support of the Church and their religion. They were also unceasing in their works of philanthropy and charity, and none stood higher in the community in which they lived.

One remark is very worthy of remembrance in the life of Philip Heyman which he often repeated, "The best of all we have in life is religion."

ANNA LEONA was born on August 8, 1859 near Grand Rapids, Ohio. She died March 28, 1878, and is buried in the Beaver Creek cemetery. She did housework for families until she secured a position as a clerk, and for several years worked at various positions to earn money. Much improved in health, she went to Sacramento and did various things to make her way with the ambition to go to school to advance.

The party visited hundreds of places of interest; they went to the Madeira Islands, Gibraltar, Algiers, France, Italy, Greece, Constantinople, Palestine and many places in Egypt. At Luxor they visited the ancient temple and there had an initiation of their order which will not take place again for 108 years. At Alexandria, in Egypt, they took the steamer to again cross the Mediterranean Sea to the Isle of Sicily, then on to Naples and Rome, departing for France and Switzerland with many stops. They visited the Fatherland, Germany, and at Cologne entrained and passed through Belgium on their way to Paris. They crossed the English Channel to London, thence to Liverpool to sail for our own great United States of America. Of all the places visited this is the place to live. We so much more appreciate it after being in such a variety of countries and can come home and count our blessings which are many.

He died at Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio, November 21, 1903, aged 77 years, and is buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery.

He received the common state school education of his native land. On March 3, 1847, he was exempted from military service on account of a temporary vocal impediment and a defect in the left knee joint.

In 1848 he emigrated to America with his parents and other members of the family, arriving in New York City May 8, 1848. The family made its way by boat via Buffalo, N. Y. to Sandusky, Ohio, and then overland to Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio, which was reached June 18, 1848. Here a home was established on the present site of the Hunt's Corners Reformed church, and he assisted his father in clearing the first small tract of farmland which in the first summer yielded an abundant harvest.

Three years later, on October 7, 1851, he married Katherine Mohr, daughter of Conrad Mohr and Henrietta (Scheid) Mohr, of Heistenbach, Germany, who had brought their family to this country about the year 1851, locating on a farm in Sherman township, Huron county, Ohio. Katherine Mohr was born January 13, 1827 at Holzheim, Duchy Nassau, Germany. Her brother Charles married Catherine Heymann, sister of John George William Heymann.

Mr. Heymann and his wife established their home a short distance from his father's residence near the present L. P. Heyman homestead, which they were permitted to enjoy together only two years and four months, when the wife died, February 25, 1854, and was buried in the Hunts Corners cemetery, leaving an infant son, Charles John, born October 18, 1852 .

The widowed husband returned to the home of his parents with this son, who was reared by the grandmother until he was seven years of age.

March 15, 1855, Mr. Heymann married Elizabeth Longsheid, who was born June 2, 1830, in Heistenbach, Duchy Nassau, Germany, the second child and oldest daughter of Christian Longsheid and his wife Maria Kessler. She died December 2, 1887, aged 57 years, and is buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery. Other members of Elizabeth Longsheid's family were Anthony; William; Margaret, the wife of Anthony Opperman; and Clara, the wife of Jacob Heymann. Anthony and Margaret Longsheid had preceded their parents to America, and in March 1854, Elizabeth came with her parents and other members of the family, locating on a farm in Sherman township, Huron county, Ohio. Both parents are buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery. Christian Longsheid's father was John Longsheid and his mother's maiden name was Dentzer.

After his second marriage Mr. Heymann took up his abode in Sherman township, purchasing 130 acres of land covered with timber. There was an old sawmill and dam on the river which flowed through this farm and here the lumber was prepared to erect the home and the barns. Acre after acre was cleared and more purchased, until at the time of his death, Mr. Heymann owned nearly 700 acres of productive and improved farmland. For many years he owned large flocks of sheep. He remained on the original farm homestead and kept up an active interest in its management until a few months before his death when heart trouble and dropsy compelled him to move to the home of his son Daniel where he was cared for by his son and his daughter Emaline (Heyman) Scheid until his death.

By his second marriage the following children were born to him in Sherman township, Ohio:

George Henry, January 10, 1856

In his home Mr. Heymann also reared his niece, Mary Elizabeth Longsheid, the daughter of his wife's brother, William Longsheid and his wife Wilhelmine (Gerhardt) Longsheid, of Sherman township, Ohio. William Longsheid died from the effects of an accident in which a heavy log rolled upon him in the woods, breaking his leg and pinning him to the ground. Shortly after his death his wife also died leaving three children, one of them Elizabeth, who was taken into the Heymann home and who remained there until about 1897 when she kept house for her brother William Longsheid near Bellevue, Ohio, until her marriage to William Christian Scheid, son of John William and Anna

Katherine (Beilstein) Scheid of Pontiac, Ohio, and brother of August Scheid who married Amalia (Emaline) Heyman. She had three children, William Arthur, married to Aranita Bishop of Peru township, and who lives in Monroeville, Ohio, having one son, William Earl; Frieda, who lives with her father on the farm at Pontiac; and Arnold Norman, a mechanic in Monroeville, Ohio. Elizabeth (Longscheid) Scheid died October 10, 1926, and is buried in Riverside cemetery, Monroeville, Ohio.

John George William Heymann served his community as trustee and as school director. He assisted in the organization of the German Evangelical Reformed Zoar congregation of Hunt's Corners, named after the "little city" of the plain which in Biblical times gave refuge and a home to Lot and his family, another little band of emigrants who had wandered far from the land of their birth. Of this congregation Mr. Heymann was a lifelong member and one of its strong pillars.

He was a man of strong and intelligent convictions, a pious, God-fearing Christian, a faithful student of the Scriptures with whose history and doctrines he was so familiar that he was perfectly at home with theologically-trained ministers in religious conversations and discussions. In 1922 he entered the employ of The International Lawyers Company, law list publishers of Norwalk, Ohio, finally taking charge of their complaint department. JOHN HENRY HEYMANN

John Henry Heymann third son and fifth child of John George and Maria Margareta (Oppermann) Heymann, was born August 13, 1829, at Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He died October 9, 1914, at his home six miles south of Burns, Butler county, Kansas, and is buried in the cemetery adjoining the Ebenezer German Methodist church, five miles southwest of Burns.

He attended school in his native village after which he, like all German boys, learned a trade. John Henry learned the blacksmith trade.

At the age of 19 he came to America with his parents and the family in the spring of 1848. They settled at Hunt's Corners in Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio, and bought land nearby. Here John Henry remained and helped his parents on the farm until 1851 when he was taken with the "California Gold Fever." Being of an adventurous disposition, he yielded to the urge; packing his earthly possessions in a trunk and with two companions left for the West by way of the Isthmus of Panama. While crossing the Isthmus their trunks were robbed and they lost all their possession. Resuming their voyage with only two barley loaves and a gallon of brandy, and proceeding overland to San Francisco, they arrived footsore, weary, hungry, unkempt and ragged. Here they expected to find a friend from Ohio who was in business, but to his dismay, John Henry learned from an acquaintance of the friend that this man had sold out and moved to Sacramento. With tears in his eyes he told the stranger of his misfortunes. The man taking pity on him played the Good Samaritan and purchased new garments for him and took him to a barber shop and bathroom, transforming him into a new man. The stranger also gave him $150 in gold which he divided with his two companions and proceeded to Sacramento where he determined to work and repay the good stranger. Here he labored at teaming, blacksmithing and gold mining. In the course of four years he returned to Ohio and bought a farm of 190 acres north of Hunt's Corners, paying for same in pure gold which he had brought from California.

He was married August 20, 1855, to Catherine Scheid, born January 12, 1832 in Heistenbach, Duchy Nassau, Germany, a daughter of Anthony and Catherine (Maus) Scheid. She had three brothers and two sisters, all of whom came to America with their parents in 1854 and located on a farm south of Hunt's Corners near Pontiac in Peru township, Huron county.

John Henry Heymann and his wife established their home on his newly purchased farm. In 1868 he and his family moved to Brownhelm Hollow on the Vermilion River, Lorain county, Ohio, where he purchased and operated a flour mill and saw mill. In 1875 he bought a half interest in the Amherst flour mill and three years later purchased the other half interest, becoming sole proprietor. In 1876 the flour mill in Brownhelm Hollow was destroyed by fire. He replaced it the following year with a modern mill. In 1879 he disposed of all his mill interests and moved back to his farm near Hunt's Corners, where he again took up farming.

On November 17, 1882, his wife died and was buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery.

John Henry and Catherine (Scheid) Heymann were parents of the following children:

John Henry Heymann was again married, December 24, 1883, to Johannette Elizabeth Heimann (see page 168).

He continued his farm operations until 1886 when he disposed of his farm and with his wife and their infant son Philip, his sons George A. and Henry E. and his youngest daughter Mattie moved to Kansas. They located on a 320 acre ranch of prairie sod near DeGraff, Butler county, upon which there were no buildings to accommodate the family or livestock. Starting anew in a new country with his usual energy he soon became comfortably situated and then listened to the old urge of adventure and took into his business race horses. This proved a losing adventure; thus he changed his system of farming, turning to sheep raising. In this he was successful and because of good management and fine stock breeding, he accumulated at the time of his death 960 acres of land which he had improved and erected good buildings thereon.

John Henry Heyman was a true Christian and a friend to humanity. Never a hungry tramp was turned from his door. Through all his adventures, trials, adversities and hardships he never lost faith in his God.

Due to failing health he was compelled to give up this promising position. He remained at home until November, 1927, when upon the advice of his physician he went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, in quest of a climate to help his physical condition. After nearly three years' residence, his health apparently had been restored. In October, 1930, he contracted a severe cold which brought on his old pulmonary trouble and developed into pneumonia, causing his death, October 9, 1930. He was buried October 14, 1930, in the family lot of his parents in the Riverside cemetery, Monroeville, Ohio.

After a short stay in Albuquerque, Donald's health was improving to such a marked degree that recovery was assured. On January 17, 1928, he was married to Pauline Hakes, born February 10, 1902, on a farm in Fairfield township, Huron county, Ohio. Her parents are Harry and Ethel (Burras) Hakes, who are retired farmers and are living in Albuquerque, New Mexico with their daughter, Donald's wife, who is employed as a school teacher in that city.

During the World War August Weber was drafted for service and on December 6, 1917, went to Camp Call Field, Wichita Falls, Texas, where he trained with the aerial squadron. He left for France in November, 1918, and while on mid-ocean word came the armistice was signed and they were ordered back to the States where he was discharged June 30, 1919.

Mr. and Mrs. Webber built a modern home on a farm near the Longscheid homestead where they live at present.

They have two children:

Verena Katherine, born September 3, 1927

He was educated in the township rural schools and completed his education at the Ada Ohio Normal school. Early in life he chose the occupation of teaching school. At the age of 17 he began to teach and taught for ten years.

In 1904, with his brothers Arthur and Paul, he bought a large tract of land at Walthall, Virginia, and engaged in farming. In 1909 they sold this tract of land and dissolved partnership, and he bought a smaller farm and operated it alone.

On January 29, 1908, he was married to Minnie Pegan of Chesterfield county, Virginia, who was born on June 20, 1889. Four children were born to this union:

Virginia Mildred, born September 6, 1908; died November 17, 1911; buried in Chesterfield county, Virginia.

In 1919 Walter Heyman sold out all of his interests in Virginia, made a short visit to Ohio, and then went to Albuquerque, New Mexico. Here he taught school again for two years and also bought a small farm, spending the remainder of his life on this farm. On the 17th day of May, 1923, he was assassinated in his own home.

He was of a kind, genial, friendly and happy disposition and took an active part in community gatherings. He was fond of all kinds of sports.

He was loyal to the church and was anxious for his children to be in the church.

He is buried in Fairview cemetery, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

At present Mrs. Heyman is a matron in the Presbyterian Mission School at Albuquerque, New Mexico.

The daughter, Verena Vida, was graduated from high school in Albuquerque in June, 1931.

ARNOLD CYRUS HEYMAN

Arnold Cyrus Heyman, fifth son and seventh child of William Frederick and Verena (Ballmer) Heymann, was born at Hunt's Corners, Ohio, August 25, 1877. He attended the country school at Hunt's Corners until he was seventeen ; then during the winters of 1894-95 and 1895-96 he attended the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso, Indiana, a total of twelve months. During the winter of 1897 he taught school at Weaver's Corners, Ohio. In the spring of 1897 he entered the preparatory department of Heidelberg University at Tiffin, Ohio, with the intention of preparing for the ministry. He attended this university steadily until 1904, with the exception of June 1900 to September, 1901, when he lived in Kansas with his oldest brother Samuel on a sheep ranch, endeavoring to rebuild a run-down physical condition. He was graduated in 1904 with the Bachelor of Arts degree.

On September 27, 1904, he married Henrietta Ludwig, born May 18, 1877, daughter of Henry C. and Marie Ludwig of Cleveland, Ohio.

Immediately after this marriage, both entered the Chicago Theological Seminary at Chicago, Ill. At the close of his first year in this seminary he supplied a church at Winthrop, Iowa from June to September, 1905, returning to the seminary. At the close of the second year, he supplied a church at Crystal Lake, Illinois from June, 1906 to September, 1907, then returning for his last year. He was graduated in May, 1908, with the degree of B. D. Also at this time he changed his church affiliations from the German Reformed to the Congregational church. Mrs. Heyman continued her work in this seminary only two years, her course being interrupted by the birth of their first child.

Before closing his school work in Chicago he made a contract with the Congregational Education Society of Boston to start and manage a mission industrial school for Mexican boys and girls on a desert ranch at Albuquerque, New Mexico. He was at this post exactly ten years, doing hard pioneer educational work for a backward, neglected people, developing, with the faithful assistance and cooperation of his wife, an institution and type of education adapted to the Mexican people. Numerous school and farm buildings were erected under his supervision and the farm was developed in a way to give the students a practical knowledge of a new type of farming. With the exception of a few years during the World War this school has continued to increase and prosper. It now, (1931) is known as the Rio Grande Institute.

In April, 1918, at the urgent request of the New Mexico College of Agriculture, Mr. Heyman became the County Agricultural Agent at Deming, Luna county, New Mexico, as a war emergency position to help speed up food production for war purposes. In February, 1921, he closed his work here and moved to Albany, Linn county, Oregon, with his wife, son and daughter, where he continued his work as County Agricultural Agent with the Oregon Agricultural College and the Federal Department of Agriculture until December 31, 1923.

On January 1, 1924, he contracted with E. N. Strong, of Portland, Oregon, to sell life insurance for the National Life Insurance Co. of Montpelier, Vermont, continuing with excellent success until December, 1926, when he was urged to take the superintendency of the Children's Farm Home of the Oregon W. C. T. U. at Corvallis, Oregon. This home for dependent children of Oregon was started in 1922 on a two hundred-fifty acre farm with good farm buildings. When he went there five cottages for twenty children each had already been built. While he was there two more cottages for twenty children each, together with four other buildings were constructed. The institution was much improved, a fine corps of workers was secured (about twenty in all), the farm was put on a paying basis, the moral, mental and physical development of the one hundred-forty children was given detailed attention. While here Mr. and Mrs. Heyman enjoyed splendid cooperation and support from the other social welfare agencies of the state as well as from the business and professional people of Albany and Corvallis and the surrounding communities.

But Mr. Heyman had almost continual trouble with some of the nineteen members of his Board, most of whom were women past seventy years of age and in his opinion unfit for administering the affairs of such a Home. The antagonism became so intense that in March, 1930, he resigned, bought an eighty acre river bottom farm near Albany and intends to remain a private citizen the remainder of his life.

Almost continually after leaving the mission school at Albuquerque, New Mexico, Mr. and Mrs. Heyman have been interested and active in religious work, chiefly Sunday school, in which he has either taught or acted as superintendent.

To them were born two children, Inez Marie and Ludwig Henry.

Mr. Heyman has always been interested in the development of civic and community life and has devoted more than his share of time for these causes. Also he has been intensely interested in farm life and this no doubt accounts for his retirement to the farm.

INEZ MARIE HEYMAN CAMPBELL, first child of Arnold Cyrus and Henrietta (Ludwig) Heyman, was born at Crystal Lake, Illinois, February 7, 1907. When she was fifteen months old her parents moved to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where she first attended the public schools. Later she attended public schools at Deming, Luna county, New Mexico, and Albany, Linn county, Oregon. She was graduated from the Albany county high school, June, 1925. In September, 1925, she entered Albany College where she continued for two years. In 1927 she entered Reed College, Portland, Oregon, and in February, 1929, on account of poor health, was compelled to quit.

On September 15, 1929, she was married to Malcolm Allen Campbell of Portland, Oregon, born June 7, 1905, at Peru, Indiana, and a graduate of Reed College. After their marriage both went to the University of Oregon where she completed her college course and was graduated in 1930. Here Mr. Campbell also secured his M. A. degree in the department of Psychology.

In September, 1930, the young couple moved to Palo Alto, California, where Mr. Campbell had a fellowship in Stanford University, to continue his studies in psychology for his Ph. D.

LUDWIG HENRY HEYMAN, second child of Arnold Cyrus and Henriette (Ludwig) Heyman, was born at Albuquerque, New Mexico, December 5, 1908, while his parents were managing the Rio Grande Industrial School. He began his education in the country public schools and became a pupil in the Rio Grande Industrial School. In 1918 he entered public school in Deming, New Mexico, until his parents moved to Albany, Oregon in 1921, where he attended the public school until he was graduated from high school in June, 1926. From September until December, 1926, he attended Albany College, in January, 1927, becoming a student at the Oregon State College, Corvallis, Oregon, and graduating in the Department of Commerce in December, 1930.

On December 28, 1930, he married Ruella Lee Morgan, born May 23, 1908, daughter of Robert Lee and Ora E. Morgan of Albany, Oregon. Ruella also was a graduate from the Albany High School and attended the Oregon State College from September 1927 to June 1929, taking Vocational education.

Immediately on completion of his college course, Ludwig Heyman began selling life insurance for the National Life Insurance Co. of Montpelier, Vermont, at Corvallis, Oregon, where he resides.

WILLIAM FREDERICK HEYMAN, JR.

William Frederick Heyman, Jr., born of William Frederic Heymann, Sr. and Verena (Ballmer) Heymann, May 21, 1879, at Hunt's Corners, Huron county, Ohio, was the ninth child of a family of thirteen. Until the age of nineteen he worked on his father's farm and was educated in the country public schools. At nineteen he studied commercial bookkeeping at a Normal College at Valparaiso, Indiana.

After leaving college he went out to the open prairies of the state of Kansas to seek health and venture into business with his brother Samuel, who was at that time in the sheep fattening business. Not being successful in this particular line of business, he went farther west to the state of Washington, where he entered the restaurant business, sometimes in charge of dining room service and other times as waiter.

In 1902 he made a pilgrimage to the land of Alaska where he suffered many hardships in tramping from place to place in search of gold. This trip brought forth many enlightening phases of a new and unsettled country. The trip was by steamer from Seattle to Skagway, Alaska, then over the trail to Whitehorse, Northwest Territory, Canada, then down the Youkon to Dawson City by row boat, the trip taking sixteen days. While at Dawson City an excursion trip was taken down the Yukon to Eagle City, passing through the Circle Rapids on the way.

Returning to the States the same year, he made a trip to California, visiting various places of interest and finally locating in Los Angeles until the following year when he made a visit to his home state (Ohio), after an absence of six years.

From Ohio he went to Chicago and stayed there for a short time and then attended the World's Fair in St. Louis in 1904. The roving spirit seized him again and he went to California and stayed there until his father's death the following year. After attending his father's funeral he again returned to Chicago where he resided permanently for about eight years, following restaurant work.

The spirit of Detroit next attracted him to the great city of the automobile, of which he is now a resident. During his first year in Detroit, 1913, he met and wooed Sara Isabelle Meade of Buffalo, New York, who was in Detroit at that time, and they were married July 24, 1917. She was born October 18, 1889.

During the year 1924 he and his wife became interested investigators of the truth of spiritualism, and to the present time they have been faithful followers of this religion, which has brought so much peace and joy in the knowledge that there is no death, that there is eternal life and that one can learn something about it before departure from this earthly plane. Both have become so proficient in the knowledge and understanding of this religion, that they have become mediums, lecturers, and writers on the philosophy and phenomena of this faith, and hope in the near future to be ordained as ministers of this religion.

CHAPTER IV

LINE of JOHN WILLIAM HEYMANN

Second Son of Johann Wilhelm Heymann

John William Heymann, second son and third child of the cooper Johann Wilhelm Heymann and his wife Catherine Dorothea Holzer was born October 4, 1802 in Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He died at that place October 7, 1852.

The records in the Church book of Hahnstatten, Germany, tell us John William was married August 2, 1829 in the church at Kaltenholzhausen to Anna Margarethe Holzer, born November 30, 1810, a daughter of the parish bookkeeper Georg Heinrich Holzer and his wife Elisabethe Oppermann. She died at Kaltenholzhausen April 4, 1862.

The following children are recorded:

Catherine Elisabethe, born February 1, 1830.

Anna Maria Margarethe, born September 25, 1839.

CHAPTER V

Line of William Conrad Heymann

THE WEAVER'S CORNERS GRANDFATHER

William Conrad Heymann, third son and fourth child of the cooper Johann Wilhelm and Catherine Dorothea (Holzer) Heymann, was born February 9, 1808, at Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He died December 11, 1893 at Weaver's Corners, Sherman township, Huron county, Ohio, and was buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio, beside his wife, who died March 10, 1884.

William Conrad passed through all the processes of the ordinary German boy. He entered the school of his native village at six years of age where he was an apt and well behaved scholar. During his eight years of school attendance he was reprimanded but once, and sat at the head of his class the four last years of his school life. It was his privilege to enter the schools a few years after they had been reorganized by the German educators according to the psychological principles of child mind and education methods advocated by the great Swiss educator Johann Pestalozzi. Pestalozzi first appealed to Napoleon of France for recognition and a trial of his idea of teaching. He was given to understand France had no use for the ABC's. He then turned to the German people where his principles were received and adopted. The thoroughness of this school system manifested itself in William Conrad's life by the fact that when past 80 years of age he was still a fluent reader and applied the principles learned in his school days to the every day problems of life.

After finishing school at fourteen, like all German boys he was expected to learn a trade. William Conrad became an apprentice for the cooper's trade. There is a prevailing belief that this custom of learning a trade belonged to the Germans alone, but this is not true, because this custom dates back to the days when the majority of the people of western Europe lived in cities surrounded by walls or "moats."

About the time he completed his apprenticeship he was called for military service. However, owing to a slight affection of the skin at this time, he was excused from the standing army and placed in the militia where he served a regular term. This military training followed him all the days of his life. Although attaining the age of 85 he always walked straight and erect. In his dress and about his farm order and neatness were the first rule and law. When those around him complimented him for his orderly ways he would reply he learned them as a soldier.

When his apprenticeship was completed he left home as a journeyman cooper (wanner) and followed this trade until he returned home to be married.

William Conrad Heymann was married October 4, 1829, to Maria Margaret Oppermann, born January 5, 1811, in Kaltenholzhäusen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. She was the second child and only daughter of William and Margaret (Ohl) Oppermann. She had one older brother Jacob and a younger brother George William. Her older brother Jacob Opperman came to America in 1846, stayed in New York where he worked on a farm near Poughkeepsie for one season, then returned to his native land. There he was married and a son Jacob was born. This son came to America as a boy, made his home with relatives and was married and settled in Monroeville, Ohio, where he died. Three children, Arthur, Pauline and Clara, survive him. Maria Margaret's younger brother George William came to America in 1849 and went directly to Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio, and made his home with the John George Heymann family, his cousins. He worked for a Mr. Wood until his marriage in 1852 to Ruth Perrington of Ravenna, Ohio, who came to Hunt's Corners with a Dr. Wheler. George William Oppermann and his wife rented the Lee farm (now owned by Thomas Heyman) west of Hunt's Corners until they moved to Hessville, eight miles west of Fremont, Sandusky county, Ohio. They reared a family of ten children. Maria Margaret's father died in 1823 when she was 12 years old. Her mother again married in 1824 to a Mr. Oppermann, a cousin of her former husband. Three children were born to this union: Philip, Wilhelmina, and Catherine. Maria Margaret was educated in the same school as her husband. Her parents conducted the village inn.

Wililam Conrad and his wife took up their residence in the old Heymann homestead. The young wife now became mistress of the home, William Conrad's mother having died July 30, 1823. In this home the following children were born:

William Anton, July 21, 1830.

John, October 6, 1832.

William Charles, March 1, 1834.

Jacob, December 28, 1836.

Jeanette K., March 4, 1839.

Philip Henry, March 19, 1841.

George J., November 10, 1842.

Henry, April 6, 1846.

Frederick William, July 12, 1848.

Elizabeth, October 8, 1851.

Here William Conrad followed the cooper's trade in connection with his farm operations which were very small. He, like most German farmers, owned very little land. After several years he found it necessary to erect a cooperage, so a building was built to serve as a cooperage and to stable the few cows and store the feed. He did not own a horse as the farming was done with the cows. For several years William Conrad served as the village shepherd.

His lot here was a hard one like that of every German farmer. The people of Nassau had suffered frightfully from the oppression of nobles and bureaucrats and the smiling province had become a scene of poverty and servitude. This led to civil strife when the people rose up en masse and demanded certain reforms of the rulers. The wild game of the forest and field belonged to the ruling classes, the people demanded this be given to the State and the privilege to hunt be sold. William Conrad bought this right for several years.

In 1848 his brother John George Heymann and his family emigrated to America. From then on William Conrad and his family made preparations to leave also. He worked early and late in his cooperage, selling the product of his labor and carefully laying by the money for their voyage. Early in the spring of 1852 the family left their native land for America, their sons, William Anton and William Charles having gone in 1849. They were transported to the River Rhine by wagon, then sailed down the Rhine to the North Sea where they transferred to another boat and sailed to England. There they were again transferred to another boat in which they made the long journey across the ocean. They landed in New York, then followed the usual course to Albany, Buffalo and Sandusky, and to Monroeville, Ohio, in Huron county, where they were met by their sons and relatives.

They were transported to Hunt's Corners to the home of his brother John George where they remained for a very short time, when they moved into a house north of Hunt's Corners. Here William Conrad engaged in farming with his family until fall, when he purchased a farm of 160 acres in Sherman township of a Mr. Manley. Much of this farm was covered with woods. The family at once took up their residence here, proceeding to farm the cleared land and cutting down the woods, making it into cord wood (four feet long) and hauling it to the distilleries at Bellevue, Ohio, a distance of nine miles at one dollar and one dollar and a quarter per cord. After several years another farm of 106 acres was purchased near Weaver's Corners. They remained on the first farm bought until the summer of 1870 when this

He helped to build the Hunt's Corners Reformed Church and held various offices in that church. He helped to organize the Lutheran Sunday School at Pontiac and served as Superintendent. At the time of his death he was a member of the St. Paul's Reformed Church at Bellevue, Ohio.

At the age of 15 he came to America with his brother William Anton, the oldest of the family, three years in advance of their parents and their family. Upon reaching New York the boys worked their way to Buffalo, and by way of Lake Erie to an Ohio port, reached the home of their father's brother, John George Heymann, in Hunt's Corners, Lyme township, Huron county, Ohio.

William Charles Heymann worked for a short time during harvest among the farmers of Huron county. He had the qualities of efficiency and fidelity and never had to be pressed in order to perform his task in the best possible manner; thus his services were in demand.

At sixteen years of age he secured employment in one of the large grain elevators at Milan, Erie county, Ohio, which at that time was the grain buying center of Northern Ohio. During this employment the manager of the business became ill and was unable to attend to his business for a year, and the entire responsibility of managing the elevator devolved on the shoulders of this young German boy of sixteen. It was his first test of real capacity for business and he gave close attention and kept his accounts so accurately that he was not only complimented by his employer but given a bonus in recognition of his work. Here is an illustration of the great efficiency of the German school system.

Later he obtained a position with Wickham and Company, Huron, Ohio, as a grain buyer; advancing to a salt fish buyer on the Great Lakes, Huron and Michigan. He also became a buyer for the firm of Ryan and Johnson, Huron, Ohio.

The year 1860 William Charles Heymann went into the independent business of commercial fishing on the Great Lakes, Huron, Michigan and Erie, with headquarters at Huron, Ohio. In the year 1879 he sold his Pond Net Fishery interests to Hudson Bros., expecting to go west and buy land and engage in farming. For some unknown reason William Charles changed his mind and the following year reentered the fishing business forming the firm Heymann & Kriss. He was one of the best net makers on the Great Lakes because of his knowledge of mathematics. Usually the average net maker had a rule or a form to follow, but William Charles could make any and all shapes of nets through figures. He continued his fishing activities until 1903 when he retired, selling his interests to his two sons, Charles F. and John P.

During his employment at Milan, Ohio, he met Miss Catherine Elizabeth Koch and they were united in marriage June 1, 1854 at Huron, Ohio. She was born August 29, 1832 in Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany, and came to America with her mother, sister and stepfather in 1848. Mrs. Heymann died February 22, 1919 at the home of her daughter Lydia in Detroit, Michigan, and is buried beside her husband in Scott's cemetery, Huron, Ohio.

Their entire married life was spent in Huron, Ohio. They were members of the German Reformed Church of Huron, which he supported liberally with time and means.

JACOB HEYMAN

Jacob Heyman, fourth son and fourth child of William Conrad and Maria Margaret Opperman Heymann, was born December 26, 1836, in Kaltenholzhausen, Duchy Nassau, Germany. He died July 3, 1917 at Weaver's Corners, Sherman township, Huron county, and is buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery.

He completed the school of his native village at the age of fourteen and for nearly two years assisted his parents at home.

At the age of fifteen he came to America with his parents and brothers and sisters. The first year of his life in this country was spent working for a Mr. Schyler north of Hunt's Corners, for which he received one hundred dollars. Until twenty-two years of age he assisted his father with farm duties. Most of the work on this farm was converting the woods into cordwood and hauling it to Bellevue, a distance of nine miles, for one dollar a cord.

When starting for himself he secured work in a grain elevator at Huron, Erie county, Ohio, for a time, then he worked for his brother William Charles, fishing on upper Lake Michigan for one season.

On October 20, 1861 he was married to Clara Longsheid, born October 8, 1841, in Heistenbach, Duchy Nassau, Germany. She was the youngest child of Christian and Maria (Kessler) Longsheid. The other members of the family were Anthony; William; Elizabeth, the wife of John George William Heymann; and Margaret, the wife of Anthony Opperman of Wood county. Anthony and Margaret preceded their parents to America and in March, 1854, Clara came with her parents and the other members of the family, locating in Sherman township, Huron county, Ohio. Both parents are buried in the Hunt's Corners cemetery. Christian Longsheid's father's name was John and his mother's maiden name was Dentzer.

Jacob Heyman and his wife lived on his father's farm, south east of Weaver's Corners for a short time. They then moved to the Hollis farm one and a half mile east of Weaver's Corners where they farmed for several years. In 1864 he purchased his brother William's farm in Sherman township on the section line road, and lived on this farm until August, 1870, when he purchased of a Mr. Alexander a farm of 80 acres at Weaver's Corners, which was one half of 160 acres purchased by the Bloomer family in 1823. This farm became his permanent home. A few years later he bought an adjoining fifty acres of the Bloomer family. This was followed several years later by purchasing his father's farm at Weaver's Corners. In 1896 he bought a farm one mile east of Weaver's Corners and the following year retired from active farm life, turning the operations over to his sons.

He passed the summer of 1898 in Germany visiting the scenes of his boyhood days and renewing the acquaintances of his school mates. This was fifty years after the first Heymann family had left Germany. The people of Kaltenholzhausen greatly appreciated his return and they showed their former boy of the village great respect.

Jacob Heyman was six feet tall, straight and muscular, weighing 180 pounds. He had the typical Teutonic complexion, very light with red cheeks and blue eyes. He was an indefatigable worker; his will was born of a determination that acknowledged no defeat; his philosophy of life was simple but sound.

In public affairs his interest was one of duty and not personal aggrandizement; though he held all the various township offices, he never sought one but always was solicited. He was a director of the Wright Banking Company, of Bellevue, Ohio, many years.

He never attended school in America but by personal application became a good English scholar. He was an elaborate reader and was well informed on the current topics of the day. His judgment in business was clear, keen and final. In politics he was a staunch Democrat.

In church affairs he was of the Reformed faith, and was a member of the German Reformed church at Hunt's Corners. When his children became of age to receive doctrinal instructions he and his wife joined the St. Paul's Reformed church at Bellevue.

Jacob and Clara Heyman were parents of thirteen children:

He attended the district school at his native village until 18 years of age, and in January, 1889, enrolled in the Ohio Normal University, now the Ohio Northern University, at Ada, Ohio. Until 1897, he spent several winters teaching school in Sherman, Peru and Lyme townships, two winters at Ohio Normal University, and the summers attending school and assisting his father on his farm.

In April, 1897, he with his brother Edward B. took over the operation of his father's farms; three years later this partnership was dissolved and each of the boys went for himself.

November 18, 1897, Calvin A. Heyman was married to Flora Margaret Heyman (see page 114).

They established their home on one of his father's farms one mile east of Weaver's Corners where they still reside. He was active in the organization of the Bellevue Farmers' Elevator and the Monroeville Farmers Grain Company, and was a director for many years; he also served as director of the Wright Banking Company at Bellevue, eight years.

Calvin A. Heyman believes the American farmer is the backbone of the entire economic structure and the farm the best place on earth to live; consequently he has been a tireless worker for rural improvements, being instrumental in bringing to the community the telephone, rural mail delivery, electricity and stone roads. He is greatly interested in civic affairs, but is adverse to holding public office. The only public office he has ever held was that of the township board of education member, being appointed for the purpose of consolidating the schools of the township.

Calvin A. is an elaborate reader and has a well selected library; his favorite subjects are history and economics. He and his family are members of the St. Paul's Reformed church at Bellevue.

He then assisted in the duties of operating his father's farm during the summer months and taught in the country schools of Sherman and Lyme townships, Huron county, for several years.

In the spring of 1897, his father retiring from active farm life,

Edward B. in partnership with his brother Calvin A., took over the operation. This partnership lasted three years when it became evident that the rigorous winters in northern Ohio were too severe for him. His health becoming impaired, he was compelled to relinquish the active duties of the farm. For several years he tried to regain his former self but made little headway. He was advised to seek a climate where the winters were not so severe, so he chose to go to California. After spending one winter on the Pacific coast he found what he had sought for in vain in Ohio—his former health and vigor. In the spring of 1903, returning to Ohio, he disposed of his farm affairs in order to make his future home in California. He secured employment with the Pasadena Electric Express as a truck driver, later becoming manager of all the trucks. September 19, 1906, he was instantly killed while at work when an automatic switch failed to operate and permitted a rapidly moving passenger car to turn onto the tracks where he was engaged in unloading freight. He was buried September 22, 1906, in the San Gabriel cemetery by the Episcopal church near Alhambra, Los Angeles county, California.

Edward Brinton Heyman was married June 16, 1904 to Wilhelmina Josephine Lepley, born November 23, 1878, at Strong's Ridge, Erie county, Ohio, a daughter of Henry and Catherine Christina (Kuhn) Lepley. In 1887 she with her parents and sister moved to Alhambra, Los Angeles county, California.

A. B. degree in 1928. She was very active in high school and college organizations, as well as in her church groups.

The following year she took a post-graduate course at the University of California in Berkeley, in preparation for secondary teaching. In September, 1929, she obtained a position as teacher of English in the Huntington Beach Union high school, Orange county, California.

On August 21, 1930, she was married to Clifton Charles Winn, born March 11, 1905, son of Fred Emory and Sarah (Moulton) Winn, of Redlands, San Bernardino county, California. Ruth and her husband returned via the Panama Canal to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where her husband is studying at Harvard University to obtain a Ph. D. degree in Philosophy which will fit him for a professorship in a university. Their plans for the future are indefinite at the present.

The subject of this sketch is of medium height and build, and has very dark hair and eyes.

RECAPITULATION

A few rambling facts and thoughts may not be amiss at the close of this volume—the first genealogy and history of the descendants of Johann Wilhelm Heymann (1761-1836).

Twenty-nine members of this family came to America and all located at or near Hunt's Corners, Huron county, Ohio. At present there are 1383 members in twenty states in the United States, 66 in Germany, and one, Lydia Aurelia Bolliger in Sendai, Japan. Two of the American kin are buried in foreign countries: Louise Virgilia Bolliger is buried in the Kitayama cemetery near Sendai, Japan, and Stephen Conrad Heyman is buried in the American cemetery, Mause, France.

John George Heymann, the Hunt's Corners grandfather, died at 86 years of age. His son John Henry died at 85 years having attained the greatest age in this family. William Frederick died the youngest at 66 years.

John William Heymann died in Germany at 50 years of age, his daughter Anna Maria Margaretha Heiman died at 71 years of age, Catharine Elizabeth Muth died at 45 years of age, and their sister Phillippine Kreussel at the age of 27 in Germany.

William Conrad Heymann, the Weaver's Corners grandfather, died at the age of 85, his son George J. attained the greatest age, 82, Frederick William died at the age of 62, and their brother John was killed by a barn door at 41 years of age.

The number of living direct or blood descendants in America of each of the three families is as follows:

John George	402
John William	177
William Conrad	235

The entire family was noted for thrift, industry, honesty and frugality; for its interest in the church, school and community; and consequently, like all German emigrants, made good substantial citizens. The original family was a family of farmers but at the present time we find a great number of the descendants in the commercial and professional world.

Many facts, experiences and activities of the family could have been added to the records in this book, but we will leave that to future writers of the family to whom we trust this volume will be of some service. However, we wish to leave a suggestion to those who may some day extend this work and that is, search the records of Wiesbaden, Germany.

The End

For owner's convenience in continuing records.
